

Submission: there is an urgent need for a Royal Commission into all aspects of the Covid response

This submission asserts the need for a Royal Commission into all aspects of the Covid response that was implemented by state and federal governments in collaboration with many statutory agencies, private businesses and community organisations.

The government has a responsibility to conduct a Covid inquiry as a proper investigation is urgently required. A Royal Commission into all aspects of the Covid response is required as the government will only face increasing backlash the more time that passes. This backlash stems from a loss of trust in all levels of government due to questions concerning the numerous negative consequences of the decisions the government made in adopting their Covid response. These questions have arisen due to the lack of transparency in decision-making and a lack of transparency in the action taken before, during and after the onset of the Covid response which, in effect, resulted not only in the implementation, but also the imposition of technocratic interventions that have relentlessly attacked the rights of Australians. It has remained clear since the early days of the Covid response, that these technocratic interventions were never about health. These technocratic interventions have instead brought about enduring and unethical changes in relation to:

- The practice of medicine, which includes undermining the right of doctors and other medical practitioners to facilitate the ability of individual patients to exercise autonomy in making their individual decision regarding informed consent without coercion or duress
- The government's adoption of unnecessary and unlawful pandemic prevention-based approaches that originated from foreign globalist organisations such as the World Health Organisation (WHO) such as 'lock downs', mandating of experimental injections and mask wearing, bans on protesting, forcing 'non-essential' businesses (predominantly small and medium-sized businesses) to close, and various other restrictions including self-isolation quarantine periods of up to 14 days, international travel restrictions, limiting travel zones to a 5km radius, limitations on time spent outdoors, imposing social distancing and threatening businesses and employers with fines if they did not deny unvaccinated people access to medical clinics, hospitals, restaurants, shops, hairdressing salons and other community and social places and events
- The government undermining the rule of law as well as denying Australians fundamental human rights and freedoms, such as freedom of speech, freedom of movement and freedom from unnecessary government intervention in their lives
- Undermining the separation of powers to impose unprecedented social, economic and medical controls over the Australian people

There is too much to include in just three pages. This is why a Royal Commission into all aspects of the Covid response is needed so urgently. There are technocratic interventions that are a legacy of the government's Covid response that are still in place to this day. These must be stopped immediately AND never allowed to happen again!

Important questions remain unanswered around the following key areas of concern:

- Corruption relating to injection procurement

- Secrecy around contracts including but not limited to contracts between government and injection manufacturers, government and pharmaceutical product suppliers and government and the legal entities awarded contracts for building quarantine facilities
- The implementation of mask mandates, especially in light of important research on this topic from the Cochrane Collaboration highlighting that the evidence of efficacy of N95/P2 respirators in slowing the spread of respiratory viruses is inconclusive
- The lack of evidence of efficacy to justify decision-making regarding implementation of numerous Covid lock downs, injection mandates, locking unvaccinated people out of essential services and community venues to prevent or slow the spread of Covid
- Official advice propagated from the outset of the Covid injection rollout as there was a lack of trustworthy evidence that any of the provisionally-approved Covid injections had already been proven to be safe or effective as the clinical trial only begun with the Covid injection rollout in 2021 and the indemnity that the government has given pharmaceutical companies against being held financially responsible for the death and injury caused to Australians from the injections
- Unfounded assertions spread by the media, pharmaceutical companies, politicians, bureaucrats and celebrities during the Covid injection rollout claiming the injections blocked transmission, or prevented or reduced the risk of hospitalization, serious illness or death; no data was available then and no data is available now to support such claims
- The government continues to down-play Covid injection injuries including myocarditis and pericarditis as well as disregarding the inadequacy of the post injection follow-up duration and the potential for injection-related deaths after the conclusion of the disingenuously short follow-up period
- Media censorship and labelling of Australians discussing narratives regarding Covid injection safety and efficacy, other than the 'safe and effective' Covid injection narrative
- Silencing of doctors by preventing them from advising their patients against taking a Covid injection, or from issuing a Covid injection exemption to a patient
- The role of AHPRA and ATAGI in the censorship and oppression of doctors including the threat of revoking a doctor's license to practice medicine, for example, if the doctor advised their patients against taking a Covid injection
- The disgusting denial of compensation to Covid injection injured Australians and discrimination against Australians who chose not to take any Covid injections

The political and bureaucratic heads of government, in collusion with many public agencies, community organisations and private businesses, inappropriately mandated and effectively coerced law-abiding Australians into subjecting themselves into receiving a course of one or more experimental injections under the threat of having their employment terminated, the threat of being excluded from participation in society, or seeing family members in hospital, and most abhorrent of all the threat of being denied the right to receive life-saving medical care for conditions requiring surgical procedures such as some cancer-related treatments and organ transplants. The legacy of the injustice from the implementation of Covid injection mandates persists even to this day for some Australians. One such Australian involves the story of [REDACTED] [REDACTED] which has already been admitted to the public record in a statement provided by MP Russell Broadbent and documented in Government Hansard for the House of Representatives dated 22/05/2023.

[REDACTED]. This flawed logic prompts a further valid question: if the Covid injections are indeed as safe and as effective as politicians and government bureaucrats claim, then it should logically follow that fully jabbed patients would be expected to have sufficient protection due to the Covid injections they themselves have had. Unless, of course, this is an admission from the government acknowledging the Covid injections are not effective. Furthermore, given that [REDACTED]

In 2021, the Health Minister Greg Hunt at the time stated in an interview with David Speers from the ABC on the 21st of February 2021 that [REDACTED]

[REDACTED] "We are now nearing the end of 2023 and this prompts another question: what is the government doing with the 'enormous amounts of data' that should be available from the 'largest global vaccination trial ever'? How is the government able to demonstrate the validity of the real world impacts of this program on population health? In reality the government is yet to provide reliable data that demonstrates the Covid injections are in fact safe at all. Another important question is what is the relationship between the effect Covid injections are having on the health of Australians and the increased rate of unexplained deaths observed in ABS data since the Covid injections rollout?

The considerations raised offer compelling reasons and evidence that many Australians are not happy and are demanding answers that only a Royal Commission can provide. Efforts by the government to avoid a Royal Commission into the Covid response strongly supports the assertion that the government has a lot they are attempting to hide. To preserve what is left of the government's integrity, a Royal Commission into all levels of the Covid response is needed urgently and Australia must urgently exit [REDACTED]
