

Australian Citizen

Re: Call for submissions and evidence to the COVID-19 Response Inquiry

The Federal Government failed to protect Australian citizens from discrimination by voting down the COVID-19 Vaccination Status Bill 2022, and the Fair Work Amendment Bill 2023.

The government's failure to protect its citizens from workplace discrimination via vaccine mandates caused undue stress, created civil and familial unrest, significant loss of income and forced some Australians into unemployment for months or years.

Australian citizens have the right to exercise bodily autonomy, regardless of the perceived risk or circumstance, and even in a pandemic. For many people, the consequences of exercising bodily autonomy resulted in job losses, and restrictions of freedom of movement. These outcomes were unacceptable.

The Federal Government's response to COVID-19 failed the Australian population, by removal of freedom of choice, and bodily autonomy.

A Royal Commission, or larger public enquiry, should be initiated to thoroughly investigate the Federal Government and its draconian, heavy handed, and undemocratic response to the COVID-19 pandemic.