

To whom it may concern.

Due to not releasing my Covid-19 vaccination status, I directly lost an employment opportunity. I had already received an employment contract, which had been signed and executed, and had an agreed start date. This was in early (January and February) 2022.

When the employer, a [REDACTED] requested my Covid-19 vaccination status, I indicated that this was private medical information that I was not willing to provide under privacy terms. The company proceeded to cancel my employment and revoked my offer of employment, directly due to me not providing my Covid-19 vaccination status.

The loss of employment due to not releasing my Covid-19 vaccination status resulted in a significant and long term negative financial and professional impact on my situation – that is still having an impact on

I am willing to provide supporting information in the form of email records and the name of the company involved on request.
